the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase from 1.1 billion to 1.5 billion (United Nations 1994).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 1990s. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) has been instrumental in this regard, and has produced a number of reports and guidelines for the 1990s (UNICEF 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994, 1995, 1996, 1997, 1998, 1999).

The purpose of this paper is to review the current state of knowledge about the needs of children in the 1990s, and to discuss the implications for policy and practice.

1. Introduction

The 1990s have been a decade of rapid change for the world's children. The number of children in the world has increased from 1.1 billion in 1980 to 1.5 billion in 1990 (United Nations 1994). The world's population is now growing at a rate of 1.2% per year, and is expected to reach 6 billion by the year 2000.

The world's children are also becoming more diverse. The number of children living in developing countries has increased from 1.1 billion in 1980 to 1.4 billion in 1990 (United Nations 1994). The world's children are also becoming more diverse in terms of their ethnic and cultural backgrounds.

The world's children are also becoming more vulnerable. The number of children living in poverty has increased from 1.1 billion in 1980 to 1.4 billion in 1990 (United Nations 1994). The world's children are also becoming more vulnerable to natural disasters and conflict.

The world's children are also becoming more aware of their rights. The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC) was adopted in 1989, and has been ratified by 112 countries. The UNCRC sets out the rights of children, and provides a framework for the development of children's rights legislation and policy.

The purpose of this paper is to review the current state of knowledge about the needs of children in the 1990s, and to discuss the implications for policy and practice.

2. The needs of children

The needs of children are the basic requirements for their survival, development, and well-being. The needs of children are the same as the needs of adults, but they are more urgent and more fundamental. The needs of children are the same as the needs of adults, but they are more urgent and more fundamental.
